Why are you smiling?" asked Sarah.

José opened his eyes. "I had a great superhero adventure. I rescued Tiger."

"Then why is she still stuck in the tree?"

José sighed. "I'll call her down," he said. "Tiger, come and get some yummy warm milk."

Tiger didn't move.

"She's afraid of heights," Sarah said.

"Then why'd she climb so high?" asked José.

"Because she didn't know she was afraid of heights."

"Oh." Once more José closed his eyes. He imagined himself waving a magic wand and floating Tiger to the ground. People cheered and showered him with superhero comics.

José opened his eyes. Tiger was still in the tree.

"You'll have to climb up and get her," Sarah said.

"Why me?"

"Because you're taller. And because I'm afraid of heights, just like Tiger."

José frowned. "I think we should call the fire department."

"No! Tiger's afraid of sirens and flashing lights."

you did it. You are a superhero!" Sarah cried.
José grinned. He felt like a superhero. He handed Tiger into Sarah's reaching arms, then climbed to the ground.

"After you give Tiger her warm milk could you give me some cold milk?" asked Sarah. "That was hard work watching you rescue her."

"It was hard work doing it, too," José said. "I think we all deserve milk. And after that we'll all read a superhero comic."
