William couldn't wait for his new puppy to arrive. Mrs. Anderson from the pet adoption agency was on her way, and William had his nose pressed against the window. A black sedan pulled into the driveway, and William ran to the front door.

William stepped back as Dad let Mrs. Anderson inside. She held the

Mrs. Anderson smiled. "It looks like you know what you're doing here."

Dad walked her to the door, and William continued to play with the puppy.

"Her name is Buttercup," Dad said.

William looked at the puppy. "Buttercup. I like it." After about an hour, the puppy fell asleep. William went to his room and played on his own, but he quickly got bored. He went to the living room where Mom and Dad were playing with Buttercup. "Can we go to the park?"

Mom shook her head. "Sorry, sweetie, but we need to stay here and help Buttercup get used to her new home."

"Why don't you play with her?" Dad asked.

William played with Buttercup until she fell asleep again. "Can we go to the park now? She's sleeping."

Mom and Dad exchanged a glance.

"William, a puppy is a big responsibility," Dad said. "You said you were ready for this, and that means you have to help us look after her and train her."

William went to his room again. Everyone seemed to be in a puppy daze. All they wanted to do was play with the puppy or watch her sleep. William was bored.

Dad walked into William's room. "You know how you like to play catch
