Wailing Well

by Kelly Hashway

"I dare you!" Eric said.

Charlie couldn't pass up a dare. She was the toughest kid in the fifth grade. She wasn't going to let a little thing like fear ruin her reputation.

"No problem." Charlie shoved her hands in her pockets before anyone could notice they were shaking. So what if there was a kid-hungry troll living in the well on the abandoned lot? She could take a quick peek and run before it climbed up to eat her—right?

"You dare?"

"Yeah,

a silly story."

She pushed through the crowd of kids and marched to the abandoned lot. Her palms were sweaty. No one went near the "Wailing Well." A stray cat had jumped on the edge of it and something pulled it into the well. It happened so fast that no one saw what did it. But now a horrible wailing came from the well. Charlie wasn't sure who had come up with the troll theory, but she hoped that was all it was—a theory.

Wailing came from the well and Charlie froze.

"Scared?" Eric yelled.

Charlie was scared, but she wouldn't admit it, especially to Eric. "You're the one that's scared. Why else would you dare people to look in the well? You're too chicken to do it yourself!"

"Look with her, Eric," Alyson said.

"Yeah," the other kids said.

“Fine.” Eric walked over to Charlie. He gulped, and for the first time, Charlie realized he wasn’t so tough. He put on a good show, but he was all talk. She wondered if he thought the same about her.

Charlie grabbed Eric’s sleeve and charged at the well. Something hairy moved inside. Yellow eyes glowed up at her. The wailing was replaced by a scratching sound, like nails on rock. The creature was climbing up to get them!

Eric screamed and ran back to the bus stop. The sun peeked out from behind the clouds, and Charlie squinted at the creature. She cranked the bucket, lowering it into the well. She heard a soft thump and cranked the bucket back up.

“Are you crazy?” Eric yelled.

Charlie pulled a gray kitten out of the bucket. “The cat didn’t get pulled into the well. It fell. It got hurt, too. That’s why it was wailing.”
