Indirect Objects and Prepositional Phrases

Indirect objects can be rewritten as prepositional phrases beginning with to or for.

example: My brother gave me his bike. ➞ My brother gave his bike to me.

Some prepositional phrases beginning with to or for can be rewritten as indirect objects.

example: Sam baked a cake for Zoe. ➞ Sam baked Zoe a cake.

Directions: Rewrite each sentence below, changing the underlined indirect object to a prepositional phrase beginning with to or for.

1. Celia wrote her grandmother a birthday poem.
   ____________________________________________________

2. Our friends gave us talent show tickets.
   ____________________________________________________

3. My brother bought me a hat.
   ____________________________________________________

4. I cooked a huge spaghetti dinner for my family last night.
   ____________________________________________________

5. James taught new tricks to his dog.
   ____________________________________________________

6. Please bring those books to me.
   ____________________________________________________
Indirect objects can be rewritten as prepositional phrases beginning with to or for.

example:  My brother gave me his bike.  \(\Rightarrow\) My brother gave his bike to me.

Some prepositional phrases beginning with to or for can be rewritten as indirect objects.

example:  Sam baked a cake for Zoe.  \(\Rightarrow\) Sam baked Zoe a cake.

Directions: Rewrite each sentence below, changing the underlined indirect object to a prepositional phrase beginning with to or for.

1. Celia wrote her grandmother a birthday poem.
   Celia wrote a birthday poem for her grandmother.

2. Our friends gave us talent show tickets.
   Our friends gave talent show tickets to us.

3. My brother bought me a hat.
   My brother bought a hat for me.

Rewrite each sentence below, changing the underlined prepositional phrase to an indirect object.

4. I cooked a huge spaghetti dinner for my family last night.
   I cooked my family a huge spaghetti dinner.

5. James taught new tricks to his dog.
   James taught his dog new tricks.

6. Please bring those books to me.
   Please bring me those books.