Primary Sources

Primary sources are firsthand accounts or descriptions. They are made by people who were present to see or experience something themselves.

Primary sources do not have to build on other sources.

Original content or research in subject areas like language arts and science are also considered primary sources.

examples

- diary or journal

- in-person photo or video

Careful!

Newspaper or magazine articles can be primary or secondary sources depending on whether or not the writer was present at an event or directly experienced the subject matter.

ALWAYS ASK:

- Was the creator present to see or experience it?
