Friday the 13th

by Kelly Hashway

Maxine walked to the bus stop, dreading the math test she had today. She'd studied and studied, but she was still worried.

"Whoa!" Adam said. "You stepped on a crack."

Max looked down. "So what?"

"It's Friday the 13th. That's bad luck already and you just added to it by stepping on that crack."

Bad luck? Max didn't need bad luck. She needed good luck, and a whole lot of it, if she was going to get a good grade on his math test.

"Do you really believe in that stuff?" Max asked.

Adam shrugged. "There has to be a reason so many people are superstitious about the test. She almost bumped right into the leg of a tall metal ladder.

"You walked under a ladder!" Adam said. "Are you trying to get all the bad luck you can before this test?"

Oh no! Max lowered her head as she walked into the classroom and slumped into her seat. This test was going to be a nightmare with all the bad luck he had.

Max's hand shook as she wrote her name on the test paper. Mr. Saunders told everyone to begin. She scanned the problems, and to her surprise, they didn't look too hard. She took her time and worked out each problem. When she finished, she brought his paper up to Mr. Saunders's desk.

Max gulped when Mr. Saunders started grading it right away. Max sat down and stared

"Yes," Mr. Saunders said. "I'm very impressed with your improvement. I thought you should see this right away."

Max smiled for the rest of the day, and when a black cat walked in front of her on the way home from the bus stop, she just smiled wider. Friday the 13th certainly wasn't bad luck for her.
