Making Fun
By Kelly Hashway

Trevor rolled a bouncing ball back and forth between his hands on the kitchen table. His father was supposed to come home early from work to take him to Game World. But it was almost seven and Trevor’s dad called to say he had to work late.

“Hey, little bro.” Anthony patted Trevor’s shoulder. “Are you going to sit there an sulk all night or would you like to hang out with me?”

Trevor shrugged. “I don’t feel like going to Game World anymore.”

“Good, because I wasn’t going to take you to Game World. I have something else in mind.”

Anthony nudged Trevor’s shoulder and motioned for him to follow.

Trevor sighed as he got up and walked into Anthony’s room where Anthony picked up a box on his desk.

“What’s that?” Trevor asked.

“No way. You can’t make those things yourself.” Trevor loved playing with bouncy balls. He had an entire collection. Surely he’d know if it was possible to make them at home.

“Oh really? I guess you don’t want to try it then.”

“I didn’t say that,” Trevor said.

Anthony opened the box and removed two cups, which he filled with water from the kitchen sink. “Now, pour the colored stuff in these packets into the molds.”

“Aren’t you making one, too?” Trevor asked.

“Sure.” Anthony leaned close to Trevor and whispered, “Bet my ball bounces higher than yours.” He smiled.

“You’re on!”

Trevor used the blue and green powdery mixes for his ball. Anthony chose red and black. They put the molds in the water and waited for the balls to form.

“How does this work?” Trevor asked.

“The water makes the power turn to rubber.” Anthony removed the molds and placed them on the table for ten minutes. Trevor couldn’t wait to see if it worked.

“Okay, it’s time.” Anthony removed the balls from the molds and handed Trevor his blue and green ball.

Trevor stared at the ball. It looked like the ones in his collection. “Think they really bounce?”

“Only one way to find out.” Anthony walked to the hallway with Trevor on his heels. They stood at opposite ends. “Ready?”

“Ready.” They each bounced their balls to the other. “Whoa! They work!” Trevor bounced Anthony’s ball back to him. “This is awesome.”

“See, making your own fun is better than going to Game World.”
