Alex clutched his math quiz in his hand as he opened the front door. He'd really tried this time, but he still barely passed. And now Mrs. Gregory was making everyone take their quizzes home to be signed.

Sounds from the kitchen and the smell of fresh chocolate chip cookies greeted Alex at the door. His stomach grumbled. No school!

“Thanks.” Mom poured a glass of milk and put it on the table for Alex. “I figured you’d need a pick-me-up after you got your math quiz back.”

Alex dropped his cookie on the floor. How did she know?

“Mrs. Gregory called,” Mom said, as Ralph, their golden retriever, snatched up the fallen cookie.

Here it comes, Alex thought. I’m grounded.

“I told Mrs. Gregory how hard you studied for that quiz,” Mom said, handing Alex another cookie.

Alex was shocked. Mom wasn’t mad?

"I think maybe we need to get you a tutor. Someone who can help you understand math a little better. What do you think?"

"A tutor?" Alex asked, still waiting for Mom to start yelling.

"Yeah. Mrs. Gregory said she'd be happy to work with you after school, but if you'd rather we could ask Michael down the street. He's a math whiz."

Alex nodded. "I guess Michael could help me."

"That's what I thought you'd say. I'll call him tonight after dinner." Mom put her hand out, waiting for the paper to sign.

Alex pulled it out of his backpack, but he held it tight. "How come you aren't mad?"

Mom smiled. "I know you tried your best. I can't be mad about that. Now if you said you didn't want to be tutored, that's a different story."
