Pot of Gold

By Kelly Hashway

“Not it!” everyone called before Jason.

“Oh, not again.” Jason wasn’t good at being the leprechaun when they played Leprechaun’s Pot of Gold, a game they made up last St. Patrick’s Day.

“Sorry, Jay. You’re the leprechaun first. Hide the gold.” Andrew handed Jason a bag of chocolate coins wrapped in gold foil.

them, he'd be stuck being the leprechaun all afternoon. He needed a really good hiding place.

Jason looked all around the yard. There was the tool shed, under the deck, in the bushes. No, those all seemed like places his friends would search. A real leprechaun would do a good job keeping the gold hidden. Jason thought about leprechauns some more. They hid their gold on the other side of a rainbow. Too bad it hadn't rained in a while. There were no rainbows in sight.

Jason looked back at the deck. He could hear Andrew counting and he was already up to forty. Jason was running out of time. Then he saw the sun catcher in the window. A rainbow glistened onto the side of the house, ending on the rain gutter. That's perfect! Jason ran for the gutter and slipped the gold inside. He dashed back to the center of the yard and stood there, focusing his eyes on his friends and not on the hiding place.

“Ready or not!” Julie said.

Jason couldn’t help smiling. He felt like a real leprechaun. He watched his friends search the yard. They checked the deck, the shed, the bushes, and the garden. Andrew even asked Jason to empty his pockets, thinking Jason was hiding the gold in his clothing. They were stumped.

“What did you do with it?” Julie asked.

“I’ll give you a hint,” Jason said with a smile. “It’s at the end of a rainbow, just where any leprechaun would hide a pot of gold.”

“Okay.” Jason walked over to the sun catcher and pointed to the rainbow on the side of the house. He ran his finger along it, ending at the rain gutter. He pulled out the gold.

“It really was at the end of a rainbow,” Julie said.

“I guess I’m a good leprechaun after all,” Jason said with a smile.
