Daisy stood at the back door and stared at the white snow covering the ground. It was March, yet it felt like December.

This winter had seemed longer than usual.

“Shouldn’t spring be here by now?” Daisy said with a sigh. “I want to take a walk, play on the swings, swim in the pool…” Daisy sighed again, thinking of all the fun things she was missing.

Daisy went to her room and flopped on her bed. She stared up at her ceiling, which was painted to look like the sky with big puffy white clouds. She closed her eyes and imagined it was spring.

Soon Daisy drifted off to sleep. She woke forty minutes later to David shaking her arm.

“Come on, Daisy. Spring awaits.” He smiled down at her.

Daisy looked at the clock. “How long was I asleep?” It couldn’t be spring already.

“Grab your pool toys and let’s go.” David tugged on her arm, dragging Daisy out of bed.
“What are you talking about?” Daisy asked.

“Just come on.” David pulled Daisy to the back door.

Daisy frowned. The snow was still everywhere. “I’m going back to my room,” she said.

“Oh no you’re not.” David tossed her a jacket and pushed her out the door.

The backyard, while still white with snow, looked different. The swings were set up, a path was cleared, and there was a large circle drawn in the snow next to the pool.

“What is this?” Daisy asked.

“You said you wanted to use the swings, take a walk, and go swimming,” David said. “Now you can.”

Daisy narrowed her eyes. “You can swim? It’s only thirty degrees out here.”

“You can swim in a snow pool,” David said, walking over to the large circle and lying down. He started making snow angels. “It’s sort of like swimming, and I set up the floating basketball hoop.” He shrugged. “It doesn’t float, but so what? We can walk along the path I shoveled and even go on the swings. What do you say, Daisy?”

Daisy smiled, happy she had such a great big brother. “I say spring never looked so good.”
