Puppy Daze

By Kelly Hashway

William couldn't wait for his new puppy to arrive. Mrs. Anderson from the pet adoption agency was on her way, and William had his nose pressed against the window. A black sedan pulled into the driveway, and William ran to the front door.

William stepped back as Dad let Mrs. Anderson inside. She held the puppy in her arms. William stared at its little brown face and instantly fell in love with her. Mrs. Anderson put the puppy down, and she immediately ran to William, giving him a combination of kisses and nibbles.

"Ouch," William said.

asleep. William went to his room and played on his own, but he quickly got bored. He went to the living room where Mom and Dad were playing with Buttercup. "Can we go to the park?"

Mom shook her head. "Sorry, sweetie, but we need to stay here and help Buttercup get used to her new home."

"Why don't you play with her?" Dad asked.

William played with Buttercup until she fell asleep again. "Can we go to the park now? She's sleeping."

Mom and Dad exchanged a glance.

“William, a puppy is a big responsibility,” Dad said. “You said you were ready for this, and that means you have to help us look after her and train her.”

William went to his room again. Everyone seemed to be in a puppy daze. All they wanted to do was play with the puppy or watch her sleep. William was bored.

Dad walked into William's room. “You know how you like to play catch with Uncle Mike's dog?”

William nodded. He found Buttercup awake in the living room. William rolled the ball to her, and she trapped it with her paws. “Good girl,” William said. They played for hours, and by the time Buttercup fell asleep on the floor, William was curled up next to her, sleeping too.
