"You're going to the charity dance on Friday, right?"

Gabby asked.

Shauna's stomach lurched. She didn't want everyone to find out she had no rhythm. "Um, I don't know if I can."

"You have to. It's for a good cause."

After her mom nodded, Shauna ducked inside.

"Can I help you?" asked a woman in a colorful dance outfit.

"I want to learn to dance," Shauna said. "There's a dance at school this Friday."

"Friday, huh?" The woman chuckled. "Dance requires study and practice. Unless you have great natural ability, I don't think I'll be able to teach you much in just a few days."

"Please? One move? Anything!" Shauna begged.

The woman sighed. "I have a class starting. You can sit in on it, but I'm not promising anything by Friday."

Shauna smiled. "Thank you!"

The door opened and kids poured into the studio. Young kids, no older than five. Shauna's face dropped.

"But they're—"

"Beginners, like you," the woman said.

Shauna didn't know what else to do, so she put her backpack down and stood next to a girl wearing an Elmo t-shirt.

The instructor, Miss Monique, talked slowly and demonstrated all the steps, but Shauna still couldn't get them right. She went back to the dance studio everyday after school. By Friday the only progress she had made was no longer tripping over her feet.

"Good luck tonight, Shauna," Miss Monique said. "And remember the important thing is to have fun."

Shauna nodded before hopping into her mom's car.

"Why? Can you dance?" Gabby asked.

"I took some lessons, but they didn't help."

"Well, you can jump, right?" Gabbed asked.

Shauna laughed. She'd worried for nothing. "Yeah. I can do that." The dance was going to be fun after all.
