Once upon a time or so the story goes, the ruler of the Heavens was Uranus, the sky itself. He locked up all of his children deep inside their mother Gaia, who was the Earth. Maybe Uranus did this because he thought his children were strange looking. Or perhaps he was scared of their power. Whatever the reason, he did not let them out.

Many years later Gaia let Uranus's youngest son, Cronus, escape. Cronus attacked his father and took over as ruler. Cronus knew exactly how bad a kid could be to his dad.

Uranus was known to the ancient Greeks as "Father of the ruler of the Heavens.

Zeus had many children. Fortunately, he was a better parent than his father and grandfather had been.

One of Zeus' favorite – and most famous – sons was Heracles. You might know him by his Roman name, Hercules. Today, people think of Heracles as a hero. The old stories say Heracles was incredibly strong. But they also tell us Heracles had a bad temper. Once he tried to take a special object called a tripod from a temple. But the tripod and the temple belonged to the god Apollo, another son of Zeus. The two half-brothers wrestled ferociously. Eventually Zeus broke up the fight using thunderbolts!

These are just a few of the often deadly, always interesting stories the ancient Greeks told. Next time you don't see eye to eye with your dad, just be glad he isn't a Greek god!

Cronus is the youngest son of Uranus. In this picture, he fights his father. Why?

Zeus, the youngest son of Cronus, was the ancient Greek god of thunder. He was also known as the "ruler of the heavens." What is Zeus doing in this picture?
